It Distresses the Amateur Cracksman Caught in Dr. Hoyt's House to Be Misrepresented as a Swell.

THE BURGLAR THAT FAILED.

. He Tells How He Got Into the Doctor's House, How the Doctor's Revolver Wobbled, and, Alas! How He Was Caught.

"I'm not a gentleman!"

James McPhillips, who was caught lugging silverware out of the home of Dr. Eugene S. Hoyt, at No. 39 West Fifty-eighth street, and as one of the penalties was dubbed "the gentleman burglar" by the literary police, indignantly made the above declaration to an Evening World reporter who talked with him in the Yorkville prison to-day. "Do I look like a gentleman?" he de-

"It's no disgrace to be called a gentleman," ventured the reporter. "But it's a disgrace to be called a "gentleman burglar," protested the un-willing Raffles, in hurt tones. "I'm him over without any bother at all. But just then the watchman put in an appearance, and I decided to give up the ghost.

"The philips sighed at the recollection of how he was trapped.

"The police are trying to make it appear that I have committed half a dozen burglaries. They're wrong. This was my first job, and"—with another sigh—"it wasn't successful. If I had been a professional do you suppose I would have given myself up without making a single effort to escape. I should say not. And do you imagine that a gentleman burglar would have treated himself with such little consideration as I showed myself. Not on your life!"
